PAPER GUN

"This is mine, but you can have it."

An intimate, original music-theatre work about resentment, identity and a struggle to let go.

TWO VOICES, ONE PERFORMER

E	The protagonist. Sung, set in upright type. He is the one trying to get somewhere.
N	The shadow. Spoken with an accent, set indented in italic. The voice that deflects, defends, and will not be held to account — until it is.
E + N	Merged. Indented italic, in bold. Both at once.
Narrator	The friend. Spoken, set in grey. Not part of the argument — the one who was there for it, and stayed.
Paul	The author, speaking to the room. Set full width, between rules.

Follow the type: upright is E, indented italic is N. The hat carries two colors, because one man is playing both sides of himself (listen for the accent).

You are welcome to read along, and equally welcome to close this and just listen.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Born in Scotland. Son of Avril ז״ל and Mori, both avid opera fans. Formed in piano bars in Europe. Seasoned across a decade of performances for senior communities on the American East Coast. Paul Tosh is a performer whose work refuses an easy distinction between entertainment, art and therapy.

His signature approach — The Song Is The Play — treats every performance as a piece of theater: looping piano, dramatic song, and the kind of presence that makes a familiar melody feel heard for the first time.

> "Live performance is exciting; there's a great feeling between me and the people there. I am always improving one aspect or another. I was born, thank G-d, with determination, and with wanting to do better.
> Paper Gun is serious work, and I want it seen — but not just for its own sake. Because it gives something to people, and particularly because it can take someone out of misery, even for an evening. The goal is to bring people into sync — that's what music does. Here the psychology is hopefully doing it too.
>
> With an audience in the room, the dignity of it shows."

THE MIDNIGHT NOTE

14 OCTOBER 2026

So it's an extremely exciting time. It's like 2:30 in the morning. I finished the farm night shift. I'm looking at the stars. I'm realizing how close I am to something that's like a dream — to have such a project, such a collection of work, which you have to have tremendous energy to perform. But I know that it's the right thing. I know that it touches people very, very deeply. I want to say that, because people are coming for a long concert — which people do when it's, well, when it's good enough.

I spent all my time on my own up at the farm doing the night shift, preparing this concert — these original works. And I realized that had I not been put at such a distance, I would never have been able to do it.

WHAT LED UP TO THE MIDNIGHT NOTE

MARCH 2026

I had been enjoying the development of my performance work very much, and it was receiving heartfelt feedback. But there is an inescapable reality: however good you are as a performing artist, performing other people's work — even with your own songs occasionally woven in, but without a larger context — is unlikely to take you where you want to go. I needed an entirely original piece. The idea of putting together a musical, though, was not appealing at all. I had tried something along those lines decades earlier and it had not worked, and I had little appetite for repeating the experience. Then, on Purim in 2026, I looked at the pieces I had been developing live — independently of any ambition — and saw a far stronger thread running through them than I had realized. They were not simply a collection of songs and ideas. There was a story, a theatrical world, and a connection between them I had not seen, and I found myself compelled to discover what was taking shape. Not realizing what the effort was going to be, I set about putting it together — to make it coherent, to pull every aspect of the presentation into one shape, and then to find a way to get it out there and secure the first performances. Still less did I know what it would take out of, and give to, me personally.

WHAT HAPPENS ON STAGE

It isn't a reading. It's a fully performed show, in which I play three characters — the narrator, and the two voices of the man — and at times speak as myself. No costume, except for a hat — and sometimes a shirt split black and white. No props, except for a series of poster boards that help to create location and mood. The rest is up to me: to make the characters vivid and real. And it has social content that is very, very pertinent today, and throughout the world — the whole question of resentment, and the psychology that sits under it.

WHY THIS SHOW EXISTS

AN ORIGINAL SONG CYCLE / OPERETTA

Paper Gun, about a conflicted opera star, was built in senior communities — years of conversations and collected wisdom. Some of the people I met carry resentment, some carry none. The difference is the point of the show.

A paper theme tied to the shadow, and parallels about sacrifice. One man plays both sides of himself. The voice that seems to come from someone else is the one that turns out to be his.

Few people close this chapter and leave it behind. Unresolved hurt sustains resentment, and resentment goes on shaping decisions long after the events.

Paper Gun is both an experience and an introduction to a method — a way of reclaiming a life from resentment. The ambition is simpler than that sounds. A song once said a thing for me that I had never managed to say for myself, and what I thought at the time was: it screams my scream for me. That is what I would want somebody to leave saying.

WHAT IT COSTS TO LOOK AWAY

It may take time to come to terms with something you can't face.

The cost isn't only the thing you avoid. Avoiding it changes how you see everything else, until you can't trust your own picture.

No single audience member participation is ever required. The audience is never singled out, addressed individually, or asked to disclose anything.

THE THIRD VOICE

Two voices do the arguing. A third one does not argue at all.

The Narrator is E's friend. He is not inside the fight — no position to defend, nothing to win, no account to settle. He is the one who was there for all of it and did not leave. That is why he can tell the story. A friend is a Narrator: he holds the version of your life you cannot hold yourself, and gives it back to you without flinching and without charge.

Notice where he stands. He never corrects E and he never answers N. He speaks when the argument has worn itself out, and what he says is always larger than what has just happened. Some will hear a friend. Some will hear something further than a friend — the one who has watched the whole of it and loves the man anyway. The piece does not insist. It leaves the door open.

And watch what the evening does with gratitude. It opens with a man who cannot say thank you — I've never been able to really say how I thank. It closes, at the end of Act Three, with the thanks finally said, out loud, to everybody. That is the journey. Resentment cannot be reasoned away. It can be outlasted, by someone who stays.

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

What you will see tonight is one man's version of the work — lived vicariously, from a seat. If something in it touched a part of your own life, there's a way to begin that work for yourself.

At the back of this program you'll find the protocol the show is built on: a way of turning resentment into grief, so that it stops costing you. It's best walked with a trained therapist beside you. The first part — getting the whole of it into words — can be done alone, at any hour, with whatever will listen.

WHERE IT HAPPENS

ACT ONE
dressing room · opera encore · on the way to the apartment · at his apartment window · the tavern

ACT TWO
the tavern with her

ACT THREE
the tavern alone / in the painting

One piano. Three acts. Forty minutes each.

Approximately two and a half hours two intervals of ten to fifteen minutes, plus a ten-minute talkback.

Paper Gun is a full-length work in three acts. Not a set an evening. Original music throughout. It goes deep. Ten years of playing this material to rooms taught me what it does to people, and that is why it's built with care.

HOUSE LIGHTS UP

PAUL

I've never been really able…

I've never known how, to thank.

Is there a tear coming down from my eye!?

A friend like you, you could never imagine.

I must've done something good,

I must've done something good,

but why?

the Narrator

And we saw into his eyes and realized that, just at the end of his actions, our dreams could come true. This is the artist!

1. PRESSURES

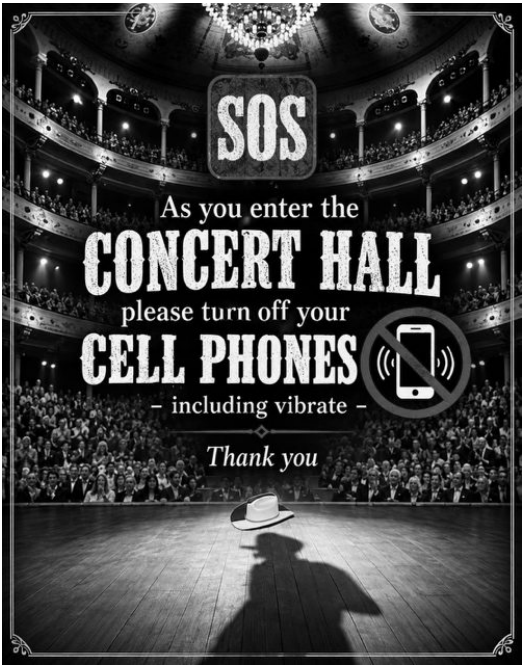

[The nerves pre performance]

E

Don't let the tensions and the pressures overwhelm you.
Your standards are bigger than this — fight for the right to determine the venue, a place where meaning exists.
Kicking and screaming is fine if they drag you to a world that is just the abyss.
Just remember:
value is not defined by vocation,
by season…
It’s raining outside and it’s the middle of the summer
….but sometimes a kiss.
Look for no more in yourself or others.
No greater complexity chimes.
No standard or bearer of words or tunes,
however refined are the rhymes.
Seek to be seeking — live to live.
Reactions and actions combined.
Remember: triumph is a game, love is the name.
May the best man win

Every difficult relationship has two people in it. Tonight, they're both me. Say something true to someone you love and if the painter steps out of the painting, you are left in something beautiful, but holding both sides of whether you did the right thing…

Not wanting to do the wrong thing in the end is the same as wanting to do the right thing…..anyway, sometimes you're left alone in that picture for a very long time…… Long enough, and you're a visitor, like our brother Jacques the Opera Star

2. THIS IS MINE

[either generosity from performance or as a complaint]

This is mine, but you can have it.
This is mine, but you can have it.

ON THE WAY BACK TO HIS APARTMENT

E

Thousands of people saw me performing tonight. Not one of them will call.

N

You call that lonely? Let me introduce you to a few people.
….wake up Brother Jack!
—we all get to choose what we regret.

Frère Jacques

Bing bang bong…..

THE PHONE RINGS, IT'S HIS EX

E

Hello

repeating what he hears on the phone

Great performance tonight – thank you, I'm like a little brother to you now Brother Jacques "Frere Jacqu hu!", do I regret that we broke up, was my career so important to me"

= "N"

Great performance tonight, You're like a little brother to me now Brother Jacques, do you regret that we broke up, was your career so important to you?!

3. BEAUTIFUL SUNSHINE

[A little full of himself after the performance]

E

At the end of the day of marked success
I take out my cufflinks as I get undressed
I remember you as I climb the stairs
Acutely aware I was glad you were there
And even though I was asleep and unaware,
I was happy to have someone who cares.

N

But I wake up in the morning, beautiful sunshine,
I wake up in the morning all I see is You
all I see is You..

4. YOU MAKE ME ROCK N ROLL

[Reasons or excuses / a phone conversation]

E

You made me rock n roll,
you made me take the can,
you made me roll.
And I'd wake up in the morning, beautiful sunshine,
I wake up in the morning all I see is You
I found my way to the edge of what's real.
I can't turn back without grabbing the wheel, but my hands are tied — because I always try to even out the deal.
My circumstance is, as you say, it's in the song, the song is the play
It's where I am and where I'm found.
To love and believe is in the sound.
A combination somewhat rare —
You know it's true. You know I care.
And all us souls who take the reins,
and pursue our goals...
It's just the same.
So I don't forget —
Like you said: We all get to choose that which we regret.
But you made me rock n roll,

you made me take the can,
you made me roll.

N

And if I did complain, if I did abuse,
the rights I had, the rights I lose.
And you along with them it seems...
So I'm stubborn and lucid, and wanton to burn including my wage, your prisoner's page.
But I'm sick of this average, I'm tired of what's old.
Let me out of this savagery, away from the bold.

E

And I wake up in the morning, beautiful sunshine,
I wake up in the morning all I see is You
all I see is You...

N

So me truly and simply, and all for the best.
my life is amazing — I still have some left.
No fear of referral, nor tears of advice.
Let go of your senses instead of MY life.

You make me rock n roll,
you made me take the can,
you make me roll.
It took a little time to think it over to see it through,
and you know I love’d you the way I do, even though I find it hard to say to you.
“hello, hello” (she is gone… hangs up)

5. THE VISITOR

[The shadow arrives]

E

In the summer, my lover comes south to visit —
the visitor in the visitors' windows.
But her voice has got the color,
the sound of "I don't care,"
and more like that than "this is fair," or "what the heck — despair."
I mean her pain, though not to belittle, is classic in that she's starting to sound brittle.
But it's still on par with all our scars,
when we find ourselves in the middle.

HE SEES HER AT THE WINDOW AND DIALS HER UP ON THE PHONE

So lets take a drink. Lets go for a walk and think, and rest your weary brow.
I'm guessing here that just one beer might not be quite enough.
Come on in through the window – I see you!
In the summer, my lover comes south to visit —
the visitor in the visitors' windows.
So what the heck — I'll get some more on deck,
and we'll sing a song of cheer.
I'll buy the round, you make the sound,

and together we'll shed a tear.
I see you
Come in but through the window
Yes I've been invited to this private party – yes

THEY GO TO THE TAVERN, shei s watching him holding court and feeling ignored

6 TAVERN SCENE

[The star & expert arrives]

Grand entrance "hi everybody….you were amazing tonight…"

N

I watched little brother Jack he was complaining at this private party about:

"How come this terrible music gets made, .
and why is that, and how come it got bought...."

N

I said – it's because there's…. two market places out there!?"
There's a market for it because There's people out there without a heart, and there's people out there with a heart.

E

"that's not entirely true", he said
"more true is there's a lot of people who keep their paper heart a secret.
And sometimes it becomes .....a secret from themselves…

…the only way I know how to tell the truth is through the opera and “some” modern art but the new chemistry is marketing
- Jacques said, and he didn’t like to be “sold entertainment” “you’d better not drink this or you might get too near a climax of reality” (holding a cigar)

N

he said in an American accent, to the Israeli entertainer, as he gave her a taste of his shot, just after he compared New York to Israel due to its finger snap style of living

E

I’m sorry to say, it’s an age old fight
But I don’t take no liberties because of my rights.

6.2 THE WORK

[They are in agreement – and on a dime fall out when it comes to buying the drinks]

E

Nobody wants to lift a finger nobody wants to do the work everybody wants to point the finger everybody feels better if they call you a jerk

N

And a genius without action is not half of a fraction of a man with a plan
who at times suffers (even expensive) distraction

E

….I’ll get the round

N

Who me?

E

Not you!

the Narrator

I think every person, at one point in their lives, they had this strong feeling — that they have to do something

….about a situation

6.3. THE JOURNEY

[Moving is the proof]

E’S FRAMING

I, I’m on a journey,
I, I’m on a journey,
You, you should have loved me,
And know that the truth had arrived
And know that you had arrived

N’S FRAMING

When truth, it is argued, silence is safer, safer in all honesty
When truth, it is argued, silence is safer, safer in all honesty

You, you’re on a journey,
You, you’re on a journey,
Me, I should have known you
And know that the truth will arrive
And know that the truth will arrive

Rebone shel L'oila anenu d'padrey de tuto de padre odom
G-d of forever answer us father, father of the fathers of man

N

Do I love you, yes I love you, but if you’re not comfortable enjoy your journey

7. YOU AND YOUR OWN

[Understanding the pattern]

E

It's such a shame when we re-frain from our nearest, dearest — about the ones we need the most.
Who could have given us all we are.
And yes, I know you're not alone,
it's not just you — I know it’s everyone.
But we pass it off, in saying we always hurt the ones we love.
You and your own
— it just makes sense in the battle zone,
not sitting on the fence.
You and your own
— it just makes sense in the battle zone,
not sitting on the fence.

N

But if you go, you'll be tested right away.
You'll be tested right away if you go.

E

You and your own
— it just makes sense in the battle zone,
not sitting on the fence.

N

But if you go, you'll be tested right away.
You'll be tested right away if you go.
So I stay.
Say what you like, do what you do — there’s nowhere else I’d rather be.

I’ve got a good reason for taking the easy way out….. now.

8. FROM A WATCHER'S POINT OF VIEW

[N observed]

N

From me?

E
Not you! I'd agree with everything you do.

N
Who me?

E
Yes you! But you've got to admire me for being so shrewd.
He's got two critics' eyes to tip if I extemporize, coz he's otherwise.
He'll calculate evaluate
But the boom bada bing if you know what I mean he'll just spectate he'll look around to qualify his:
graduated, elevated,
never made it, compensated,
syncopated, un-dilated,
stuck on auto-automated answer —
Coz he's watching you
From a watchers point of view
"Who me?!"

N
Not you! you'd agree with everything I do.

E
Who me?!

N
Yes you! But I've got to admire you for being so shrewd.
from a watcher's point of view.

E
You've got two critics' eyes to tip if I extemporize, coz you're otherwise.
You'll calculate evaluate
But the boom bada bing if you know what I mean
You'll just spectate You'll look around to qualify your:
graduated, elevated,
never made it, compensated,
syncopated, un-dilated,
stuck on auto-automated answer —
Coz I'm watching you

N
from a watcher's point of view!?
Tell me what YOU'VE observed about love

9. WHO KNOWS JUST WHY

[The protagonist questions himself]

E
Who knows just why we turned around and hide when reminded of love —

why did I try to pretend it's not there when I recognize real love?
Inspiration leads to love.
So I wait for you,
everything that you do.
I can afford to dream.
If I know you know what I mean — exaggeration needs to hope.

N

Against my ever persistent sound of intransigence

E

Tell me not brother Jacques
Tell me not for whom the bell tolls —
Brother Jacques
Wake up you could Be somebody!
the bell tolls for thee
Brother Jacques
Brother Jacques
are you sleeping,
are you sleeping
Sonnez les matines
Sonnez les matines
toll the morning bells
toll the morning bells
Ding, dang, dong,
Ding, dang, dong

9.2 TO BE

N

To be, or not to be — really, is that's a question!?
...Sometimes it is more noble to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,

E

but at others one should take up arms against a sea of troubles — and by opposing, end them.
...To no longer die — to no longer sleep!
...And to no longer sleep, is to say: live.
… live with the heartache
and the thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to!
But I see no consummation devoutly to be wished!
...Live! Stay awake Jack
There we can dream

N

Theres the rub in that sleep of death what dreams may come — when we have shuffled off this mortal coil,

is that what gives you pause...
That the dread of something after life,
the undiscovered country,
from whose bourn no traveler returns, puzzles the will...
...should it also make us bear those ills we CAN SEE?
Rather than fly to others we know not of?
Let not the native hue of resolution be sicklied over with the pale cast of thought.
Let not enterprises of great pith and moment their currents turn awry and lose the name of action.

N
If I was asked by G-d, what did you think of your life
I'd say in someway I was forced
I would have rather stay and been a good wife
But things are now just as they are
And an adjustment now for the family we lost
Could be harder to bear than the cost

E
Self justification comes in many forms
You need to culminate phenomenal heart
Not to cultivate a nominal heart
To culminate: to bring together to the highest degree Phenomenal: phenomenal and a heart like a lion

10. PAPER GUN

[The weapon named]

E
Like a social misfit I play the scene —
"there's good and bad in everyone,"
So I think I'll come out clean.
Anyway you won't give me the pleasure;
you won't give me a rise.
So I'm blissfully unaware of why I should be despised.

N
"Never rub another man's rhubarb" it's always good advice.
Like "An eye for an eye, or a tooth for a tooth" — there's a price.
But perhaps avert your gaze, and a little less self praise when temptation fires your ego.
you'll notice in time you're not paying the fine —
"I'm all right Jacques" doesn't cover the legal….

E
what is the definition of illegal….

N

It’s not funny

E

But I am your enemy, my friend,
and till the bitter end,
You’re the reason for my mindful treason.
it's broken — so what's to mend?

N

In hot and bloody cool disdain, you've justified most every lie.
Morality can feign.
The end was over when the war begun.
In this battle for identity over a paper gun

N

Gun paper gun paper gun,
gun paper gun paper gun,

N

gun paper gun paper gone soon he'll be seeing the light
Bang bang bang bang bang

You move and struggle you double your trouble
I'm bursting your bubble your stuck in a boat or the water your soaked how do we float in our life

E

let it out and bring it to the surface to culminate phenomenal heart x2 let it out and bring it to the surface x2 to culminate a nominal heart
I know it's in there, let it out x2
let it out and bring it to the surface
there it's there yeh yeh dadaba b aba ba daa daa daaa (with trumpet)

N

You never knew if I really loved you

If I gave you a paper crown, you've been let down
I tried to make amends Without defending Perhaps pretending

E

My story is paper gun some make it when they're young but all you see is glory

3. THE OPEN SECRET

[The impossible ask - N is introspective for the first time]

N

When I'm raw from something I saw,
when I've lost that feeling,
the ability to relate,
I'm losing standing...
...forgiving.
To keep me alive I kill it inside, vainly numbing out any old wishing.

So take the day off — why not!
Say you have a cough? Pretend!

N

No no. No more of that — you don't know where it'll end.

E

OK, so just be sincere.
Say — in your own way —
you don't want to be here.

N

But here is fine.
It's just a matter of time.

the Narrator

…between you and me: "you know that's a line."

E

A bit faster than mountains, but slower than clouds.
Contradiction's the terms —
it's all that's allowed.

N

And in that deafening silence, the open secret returns:
what's too long…..
…will we ever learn?

E (the tip off point)

…. it's been a while.
I see you've still got your style.
All laughs,
and in your eyes, no smile...

4. LEMON ICE-CREAM

[She refuses the word. He sweetens it.]

N
"Tart to the taste,
in your face!
Give me some space."

"I'm just trying to retrace."

N
"It gets in your eye —
you and I,
how, when and why it always makes us both cry.
And still are few the times,
no matter the rhymes,
in between the lines

E
You're ignoring the signs!
"Caught up in all of this,
I say: without a kiss,
a taste of bliss —
you're like my little sis?"

N
I'm not a lemon.

E Lemon Ice-cream tears are bitter yet sweet
Your heart may be broken
But it's just until next time we meet Your soul may be crushed but it's just until the next rush
Your faith may be lost
But is it a cost you're prepared to pay!
Lemon Ice-cream tears will come down and then just remember they're sweet and stay on your feet and you'll never know an ice cream kiss
Oh little sis
From an ice cream heart, a confusion of the art
…from a broken paper heart

N
I'm not a lemon.

5. TWO FACED

Just think of what could be.....if you accept what is.....not what someone else said it should be or should taste like or should look like or feel like You've got yours

N
it's not mine
but it doesn't mean to say that you won't feel fine

E
doesn't mean to say that I'm out of my mind 1 2 3 and I think it's gonna be just in case you think I don't care

N
just in case I think I do

E
I'll try to write it all down put it in a song or a letter but I'm not going to sing it to you to your face to face to face
two faced
"two faced"

N
don't call ME "two faced" it seems like only yester-day you were in love
how can it be so, what do you need to know to let go

how can it be true, what do you need from me to get to you

to get to who?!

E
to get to you.

N
get a clue!

"TORNA A SURRIENTO" (COME BACK TO SORRENTO)

Ernesto & Giambattista De Curtis

E

What's it going to take to get you to come back to me

N

Come back
Come back
Come back to Sorrento!

N

And so we sang together we sang together
we sang alone
I don't know if that's going to paper over the gap—

N

…it is what it is
"hmm it is what it is!?, it is what it is, it is what it is but! what it isn't, what it isn't is what it is
- coz if you don't know what it is, that's what it isn't
-and that is what it is
• so what it isn't is what it is.
Well what it was is what it was - and what it was
is what it is when it was
What it's going to be, is what it is when you get there, but we're not there so it isn't what it is.
What it might be is never what it is
And it isn't going to be what it is:
"it isn't what itis, it is what it is" you can't say about "might be"
- it isn't? ...
and that doesn't qualify as:
"it isn't is what it is, when what it is, is what it isn't it doesn't, no!"

That’s it!

You’re always so funny about it. — Try living with it.

6. THE SPACE BETWEEN

[The prayer in the eye of the storm]

E

The space between where we've never been…

N

is what it is

when it's not,
but what it's not is what it always was,
what it could be
I agree "that’s something else."
I’m talking about the space between what things look like and what each of us have seen to the enemy:
just leave a little doubt.
The space above is filled with love, but the space between is what gets you there.
Ah, the space below — too well we know — in the space between is what we won't show.
And leave a little doubt

N

Sorry sorry sorry
Thank you thank you thank you
I agree with you I agree with you I agree with you
The all come from the same space
That’s the space between
The sorry is the deepest one, works on the ability to say sorry,
And you are working on the ability to say thank you, or: I agree with you.
Saying "I tried, and I failed, so I cheated" — need not be to say you are defeated.
It may be the end,
but let to each, an amend for that which is now completed.

7. TRAUMA RESPONSE

[At the most raw and honest]

E

I'm not surprised!

Of course I know you're doing your best.
Reaching for me — "it's not a test."
You want to give some kind of hope, but please — it's a joke.
The fact of the matter is:
I could always forgive, I just can't forget when the past is in ever present — no chance to choose to regret.

N

Ever need to
"vilify to satisfy."
So no belief in nature too.
Same for G-d.
That's the waste.
When we both are gone,
please G-d we'll get along.

E

If I could only let it go permanently, but that means to be indeterminately free.
so I'm just soothing the pain as best as I can to find a way forward to be the man

N

Why not try a little amnesty

8. A LITTLE AMNESTY

[The plea]

N

Ooo, when it goes wrong,
and it seems for so long,
you need both parties to be strong,
no matter the song.
If only one sings along,
or bangs on a gong,
there's nothing upon which to prolong.
And eventually it all stops.
Call the cops.
Some whistle raindrops,
others do the flip flop.
But whatever the scheme, in the lines or in between — ain't nobody seen all of the majesty,
as much as the calamity.
Well, if what you want is some sanity,
try to broker a little amnesty.

TRUTHFUL LOVE

N

Aren't you in the mood to sacrifice truth for love?
They say the road to truth is through nothing but peace

E

They say the road to peace is through nothing but truth

N

But the road to love
That's knowing which to chose from the above

E

In the summer, my lover comes south to visit the visitor in the visitors windows

N

But you can't let me in the front door,
Coz you think if you bring it through the front then it can be said,
And if it can be said it can be broken.
So you can not say to me generously
A broken man you will forever be

9. BROKEN MAN

[The raw plea]

E

G-d help a broken man
If that is what I am Help me to understand
don't give me reprimand
don't bet me or vet me but don't forget me, get me don't free me coz u wanna be me but don't deceive me see me
don't astound or confound I'm ground to a pound
muta d'accento
e di pensier

N

When I hear your voice
I change my mind
G-d help a broken man
If that's what you're saying I am Help me to understand
don't give me reprimand
Don't test me or arrest me but don't second guess me bless me don't schmooze me or use me or lose me

choose me, excuse me….excuse me!
don't tug or shove come with love
muta d’accento
e di pensier

N
When I hear your voice
I change my mind

10. PAPER CROWN

[The turning point — vulnerability as the key]

E
I once had a girl.
She said to me:

N
"Your problem is you're not available.
The problem is you're not vulnerable,
You’ll give anything to the ones who can’t ask you for it.”

E
I said: "I can't be vulnerable with everyone."
She said:

N
"But with me you need to be,
so as you can be what I'd like to say is authentic.
Because after that,
the only way that you can be intimate is if I feel that you were authentic."

E
I said:
"What's that got to do with being vulnerable?"
She said:

N
“Well if you can't be vulnerable, how can you be authentic?"

E
I said: "What!?"
She said:

N
“If you can't be vulnerable”
E— selectively —

N
“you can't be authentic”
E— ostensibly.
I said:
"But I need to be in control."
She said:

N

"That's your problem.
If you have to be in control you can't be accountable, and if you can't be accountable you'll never be vulnerable."

E

I said: "What!?"
She said:

N

"Your problem is you need to be in control, coz if you're not in control
you'll have to be accountable, and if you can't be accountable well then you'll refuse to be vulnerable."

E

"Ahhhh" I said. "You're driving me crazy."
She said:

N

"That's right."

E

"Well let me tell you something, my dear — there's one reason I can't give up needing to be in control."
She said:

N

"Oh yeah, what's that?"

E

"I'm insecure because of my that paper crown you gave me"

N

"Ah! – it's my fault"

she said.

N

"Now we're getting somewhere."

"Yeah, yeah, yeah — but the deeper reason I'm insecure..."

N

"Oh"

E

she said.

N

"Why's that?"

E

"I never had any faith in the first place"

N

"Ah, so"

E
she said.

N
"What you're telling me is:
if you had faith you would feel secure,
you wouldn't need to be in control,
then you could be accountable,
then you could be vulnerable,
then you could be authentic,
then we could be intimate."

E
"That's perfect" I said. "Well done.
Couldn't have said it better myself.
She says:

N
"Oh but the opposite is true — you'd better be careful.
I'll explain it to you:
If you really have no faith, and you're insecure, and you need to control, and so you can't take accountability, what you'll do is you'll vilify — you'll vilify so that you can't be accountable — you'll vilify, it's not as simple as not being accountable, you'll actually vilify.
Bedeviling.
And if you bedevil you'll end up duplicitous, and if you're duplicitous no-one will want to be near you,
and that will be isolation.
So it stands you in good stead to develop a little faith."

E Vive la difference
That’s the difference
…. I don’t need this paper crown
Crown paper crown paper crown.....
Crown paper crown paper crown.....

11. THE PAINTING

[soliloquy]

the Narrator

He pointed down the Italian river Street scene, where there's no one else there except for her and this situation. And he said to her with veracity as he pointed down the river Street with a scroll in his hand, he rolled up a piece of paper. he said

E

“Vive la difference, I don’t need the paper crown….That’s the difference”

the Narrator

-and she was gone.

the Narrator

And he was alone. He was alone in this beautiful setting, to be alone, to be alone for the rest of time. Initially, it seemed like a most horrible thing, but...!

Leading up to that she'd come, visiting, in the visitors windows. This parting scene had started with her there. There was an emotional hug, she said can we take it down a notch? The shadow of someone else could be seen outside... was she going to chat with them to deflect and avoid him as usual. He said

“We can close the window, and we’ll chat.”

the Narrator

They entered some of the usual competitive arenas; where everything's polarity, everything's some criticism of the other in some form, it's unavoidable.

It eventually led to her saying

N

"so you'd rather hurt me"

the Narrator

he said... he had the presence of mind to be able to say it for the first time

E

"I'm not trying to hurt you, I'm trying to prevent myself from being hurt.... and THAT'S the difference".

the Narrator

Before that there was some interaction and dialogue - and he was trying to hug her as if to say;

E

that's what I have to say,

the Narrator

but it was also impossible. She was too stiff. It was impossible.

Before that he said,

E

"maybe I can play some piano.
I dream this amazing melody

OR

I'm doing some interesting stuff these days.

the Narrator

He played a little bit…."

E

In the summer, my lover comes south to visit the visitors in the visitors windows

the Narrator

…but that didn't last. she'd come to visit him, yes, but it was to wonder what was going on, as if to wonder

N

"what's wrong",

the Narrator

of course he would be the one to venture to say

"OK lets talk!!

the Narrator

And he managed to prattle on about quite a few things, but it wasn't landing.

Left alone in what looks like this Turner Venetian oil painting - beautiful sunshine -- with beautiful buildings lining into the distance - which are probably not really either but that's what had been painted around him, to then have the painter removed from the painting the second he hit her with that final line,

"that's it, "that's the difference"

11.2 THE DESTINATION

[Arriving is the trap]

E

Sometimes the destination is a trap. The journey is where it’s at. I wonder if you can atestify to that.
When faster than mountains, but slower than clouds.
Contradiction's the terms —it's all that's allowed.
And in that deafening silence, the open secret returns:
what's too long…..…will we ever learn?

12. UN ARTISTE

[we sang alone]

E

And so we sang together we sang together we sang alone
In the middle of the noise on a crowded day,
I can hear myself and you know I want to say something An artist has to make some room and everything he seems taking that the higher lines are free
And so we sang together we sang together we sang alone.
And how it feels to be seen and known for what you have and what you let go, and let show and how it feels to be dreaming, though everything's really quite sad, but I'm glad for what I have
If an artist has to make some room and everything he seems, tell me really, are the higher lines ever free
and so we sang together we sang together we sang alone
Finally letting him go, finally sitting down finally what I know, laughing like a clown in town

N

He doesn't care about the physical it's too political for his visible, lyrical, spiritual melody.

E

He cares about the sense of it.
He's into the defense of it,
but not with violence or silence he is free.

N

He doesn't care about the surreptitious he's into helping you get rid of the delicious and malicious monkey on your back

E

Taking that the higher lines
Taking that the higher lines

N

Taking that the higher lies Come with a fee

ACT THREE — THE EMERGENCE

PAPER HEART

PAINTING without shadow figure

1. FROM A LIVING GRAVE

[The descent and the return]

E

The day is over
The war is lost
There's naught to do
But count the cost Far beyond the twist of hope Past the point
Of buying a rope
Death of faith and spirit too
Resignation all to do
Lines of poetry, will they save...
Except to sleep...from a living grave

N

I realize I could have helped you
Even though I could never help myself
It doesn't do to tell me now why
I'm left on the shelf
Far from any voice
Never believing, self-deceiving
Still thinking I have a choice
Far removed from my truly loved one

All in the name of expectation yet caught in the fear of all things near due to past relation
But you are imbued with beauty still
You leave the others in the dark Cast by your shadow of endless light
Eclipsed only by the water mark of this Noah's Ark

2. PAINFUL BOTHER

[Farewell to the dynamic]

E

but when hate consumes you inhale the fumes, and even more so come to anger, love is a reality —
but not at the price of all sanity
So fare thee well on the rest of your journey
Life is short.
I'll see you in hell —
just as sorry for what I'm not.
Where your charm and humor

N

unless of course G-d is a rumor

and being made of ice

N

just as you are so nice

E

will catch no sympathy

N

"perhaps it's all serendipity".

E

to save you the heat, perhaps you'll suggest people are just pieces of meat

3. BY HERTZ

[Reflection]

N

You make me feel like I sold out a friendship
I always feel you feel me a fraud
I guess I can see the contention Simply laughing was hard to applaud Coz it's true it is always as such
For tHis worLd is set up to be so Things get to where they are going
And those who will know, who will know?
...those who will go

…a genius without action
is not half of a fraction
of a man with a plan
who at times suffers in distraction…. Did I tell you the joke…

N

In other words what I concede is Perhaps I'm not so in need For if the road I have chosen is just One also travels in trust

E

But oh how you hurt me without any question
It pinched at the heart of a home
I'm sorry I lost to invention buy you, you re-calibrate on your own just to get on the wavelength Apropos to avoid just deserts never turning to G-d for strength
As seen, and as measured by hurts

N (WHISPER)

4. FAITH

[The resolution]

PV

E

ED IL MIO BACIO SCIOGLIERÀ

And my kiss will break the silence, that makes you mine!
But my secret is hidden within me
My name no one shall know
But on your mouth I will tell it
When the light shines

N

When things don't seem black or white, or white or black,
it's a time to stop — but not look back.
It's time to rest and see what tomorrow will be.

If you want, call it a test.
But be assured that He knows best.
His truth abounds without a sound,
even in a mess.
If you see the good,
you'll see the best
You're not naive to trust.
In fact, it's the opposite for us —
when things seem bad, try faith, a tad.
I know, it's easier said than done,
be it money, health, or love, or losing someone.
His truth abounds without a sound,
even in a mess.
If you see the good you'll see….
HaKadosh Baruch Hu: "VINCERÒ" "VINCERÒ"…
…And I wake up in the morning — beautiful sunshine —
I wake up in the morning, all I see is You

5. ROCK N ROLL / SUNSHINE

[The fantasy return —rehearsed, and never had]

N

You make me rock n roll,
You make me take the can,
You make me roll.

E

And I wake up in the morning — beautiful sunshine —
I wake up in the morning, all I see is You.

N

So what do we do? We stick at it for what we knew.
But the situation's always on the brink.
How do we mend this painting?
I tell you what — this is how I'm starting:
telling you now that I'm in for keeps.

E

What did I do to deserve someone like you?

N

What did I say, you tell me the things I do make you go away?

E

I really didn't mean to hurt you that way. Tell me you don't mean all the things you say.

N

True sometimes we say the things we don't want to do.

E

You say that we can understand if we land a hand

N

if we stay for the fight if we hang in there tonight

E

You make me rock n roll,
You make me take the can,
You make me roll.

N

And I wake up in the morning — beautiful sunshine —
I wake up in the morning, all I see is You.

E

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
For thou art more beautiful than anything Shakespeare could say.

N

Shall I compare thee to a starry starry night?
Thou art more dazzling than anything Vincent tried to hold in sight.

E

None of that was ever said. — I just know it by heart
Best not to forget — We all get to choose what we regret.

N

So you’re still not in the mood to sacrifice truth for love?

EVERYONE GATHERED AROUND N LAUGHING

6. JUST A MOMENT AWAY

[for what once was].

E

You know I love you
I can’t let the truth get in the way

you know I loved you “AM I IN THE MOOD TO SACRIFICE TRUTH FOR LOVE?!!!”
regardless, that's what I want to say it always seems like just a moment away
I hope you’re ok
just a moment away
I hope you’re ok
that’s what I want to say What has love become if it’s not being willing to die for someone
That you want to kill anyway
Usually for the things they don’t say.

N

….you don’t say anything

E

With everything so unspoken,
It should not be thus.
If I could just forgot what it's like to think,
to think to think of us as us.
Let me grieve
what once was —
that soothing,
makes reminded of.
Let me grieve
what once was —
that soothing,
makes reminded of.
But I miss you so much
So much of the time.
I know you miss someone.
I wish it was mine
When you speak everyone laughs and there are many tall giraffes who are leaning down to listen for that sound
It’s just a moment away

N

they say grief is love that has nowhere to go,

E

tell me something I don't already know.
No one escapes it, and it seems to be so —

N

I'm inclined also to "that's how it goes…
And brother Jack
“….I KNOW YOUR GETTING ANXIOUS TO CLOSE

E
Some traditions are wiser, and so it is thus:
made in an acceptable way,
and expected of us.
“FROM THE CLOSED FILE”
Let me grieve
what once was if it ever was
That crying makes
Not forgotten of…..
But not resentful of Let me grieve
what once was if it ever was
That crying makes Reminded of
Not forgotten of…..
… not resentful of
Such a lovely day
Let me grieve
what once was if it ever was
… it was

7. A LOVE LEFT BLEEDING

[the ceasefire, both of them sorry].

E
Such a lovely day
People are so nice
And here am I
The loser
Who just lost a little more than twice
The dreamer who kept an open door
In the face of endless denial
Unfazed by every trial
Up until now
When actual bliss
In a simple kiss
Is what’s to be denied
For some reason, unspecified, unsupplied, mystified

N
Perhaps detachment on a self-preserving slide Or instilled by such wanting a paradox of pride

Critically framed as needing

E + N

And there you have it Love left bleeding

E

I love you

N

So why don't you call

E

It's too painful

N

So that's love!?

E

It's mixed with fear
I just want to hear something true

N

What can I do?

E

Sadly by now it's all a mess

N

I miss you

E

I think I understand, but I'm not sure you really do

N

I'm sorry

E

Me too
Best not to forget we all get to choose what we regret

8. LET ME CRY

[The release / the prayer]

E

When I think of the pain that we've been through and I think about how it's true That everything that we'd been through should have been another step closer too
How could I say
What did I know

N

... you know a lot
At least to cry is something, that we knew how to do

at least to cry is something,
and how would I cry with you with our tears we found a way we recognized what we want to say Even though the pain held us inside we knew the tears were not pride

the Narrator

Let me cry for those who need it most

Let me cry for those due to meet the unknown and a heartfelt plea to revive my soul

To light a bright torch

a lover that really was only a habit

a parent that was warm but cruel or the friend who always though of you as a fool

And we'd waste away these hours doing one thing right
I'm not trying to say
"I'm trying to say I know what's right"
What I'm trying to say
is please let me cry
what I'm trying to say is please let me give,
with our tears we'd find a way we'd recognize what we want to say What I'm trying to say
is please let me cry
what I'm trying to say is please...

the Narrator

"there's something needs to be done. It's like something in you that says I need to do this. And if I don't do anything else, I know that I know that I know that I have to do this.

I think every person, at one point in their lives, they had this strong feeling — that they have to do something, about a situation. Maybe they were raised in a way that they shouldn't.... I'm saying something must be done.

It's like one of those people who need to climb Mt Everest: it requires years of training, and then facing the unknown up there.

So many have tried and they have failed, and some have even lost their lives —

What else can I do you look so blue a shoulder to cry on or you can rely on but I can’t decide what to tell to those eyes to those eyes
what if I wipe those tears even holding back the pain that I know you’ve been hiding you can put it in writing you don’t have to tell me why It’s the hardest thing to try There is nowhere else you’d rather be there is no one else you’d rather see.
We know there’s no one else as close to me laughing at the sea.
Oh there is nowhere else you’d rather be
I know there is no one else you’d rather see
I know there’s nowhere else in modern art
With a broken paper Heart
Look at these soaking eyes

The angels cry for what you know just close your eyes and just let go Now close the door,

and come on home for Christmas

There’s a tear coming down from my eye!
A friend like you, you could never imagine.
I must've done something good,
I must've done something good,
but why?
There are things in my life
at this time all alone.
There are things that I carry
And even more dreadful that I cannot postpone.
And there is not one nuance.
One character of pain.
That my friend doesn't know of
And truly loves me the same
In this amidst sadness.
Is a marvelous joy
It's almost worth it to savor, to suffer, my boy
Dear Lord, give me wisdom.
Dear Lord, give me strength,

Dear Lord, no more division
You've taken more than a 10th
But to him the world
Let him breathe in Your light
For whatever he lacks
On my darkest of nights
But to him the world
Let him breathe in Your light
For whatever he lacks
On my darkest of nights
Made bearable and sweet no other could I meet in deference complete
I bow at his feet

A NOTE ON SAFE PORTRAYAL

Paper Gun passes through despair. Act Three opens at the lowest point a person can reach, and it is fair to ask how that is handled.

Research on media portrayals of suicide distinguishes two effects. Sensationalized or detailed depictions — particularly those naming methods — are associated with increased risk: the Werther effect. Portrayals of people who come through a crisis, and narratives of hope, coping and recovery, are associated with reduced suicidal ideation and with people being more willing to seek help: the Papageno effect, named for the character in The Magic Flute who is talked out of despair by other voices.

This piece is built to the second pattern, deliberately. The protagonist survives, and the act moves from the lowest point to recovery. The despair is never left unanswered — a second voice replies within the same song. Contemplation is depicted as something already passed through, described from beyond it rather than as a present intention; one line refers to a means in passing, at the point of deepest despair, and nothing is described, shown or instructional. No action is ever taken or planned, and nothing presents an ending as relief or escape. A method for the living is offered instead, printed in these pages, with the recommendation that it be walked with a trained therapist. A talkback follows the performance, so nobody leaves at the rawest moment without a room to be in. And no one here is ever singled out, addressed individually, or asked to disclose anything.

This describes how the work is made, not a claim about what it achieves.

GRIEVING THE LIVING

A practitioner's protocol for mourning a relationship with someone still alive

BY PAUL TOSH · CREATOR OF THE OPERETTA PAPER GUN · TOSH42.COM

This protocol comes from lived practice: to be undertaken with guidance and alongside professional therapy — and from twenty years of performing for audiences carrying losses that have no closure. It is offered to fellow sufferers and to the clinicians who treat them. Nothing here replaces therapy; much here may make it work better.

THE PREMISE: RESENTMENT IS GRIEF STILL LITIGATING

Resentment and grief are the same loss in two states. Resentment keeps the case open — someone did this, someone owes, the account awaits settlement that never comes. Grief is the write-off of a debt accepted as uncollectible: not forgiven — surrendered. Chronic bitterness toward the living is usually mourning that was never permitted to start, because the person is still alive and hope keeps re-filing the claim. The rage does not fade into indifference; properly grieved, it melts into sadness — and sadness, unlike resentment, completes. Progress test: the grieving has succeeded on the day revenge becomes boring. Not resisted — uninteresting.

THE TWO PAINS

"You hurt either way — why not stay in contact?" The pains are not symmetric. Contact-pain is corrosive: it does not merely hurt you, it replaces you — you see yourself through the other's eyes, and the damage compounds, degrading the very instrument that would recover. Distance-pain is clean: an amputation — love with nowhere to go — and it diminishes, because grief completes. One is a disease, one is a wound. Wounds heal; diseases progress.

THE PROTOCOL

Loss of a living person lacks what mourning requires — an event, a date, a ritual, witnesses. Supply them deliberately: (a) a one-page eulogy for the good that was genuinely real — grief needs an object, and the page holds the quiet material the bitterness would otherwise drown out; read it briefly and regularly, though for those who process through dialogue and performance, conversation and expressive work may carry the active grieving while the page serves as anchor; (b) a sealed file — the complete record of harm, one's own wrongs included, written once at full voltage, your Paper Gun, then closed: visited only in therapy, never re-litigated at night (it doubles as a target list for trauma-focused work such as EMDR); (c) a bounded window — fixed start and end dates; boundedness is what licenses the psyche to stop; (d) a physical closing act — the page printed and put away, a composition, a stone: the body must register that a burial occurred; (e) one witness — grief unwitnessed barely registers as having happened; (f) clergy sanction where faith is live, converting private improvisation into authorized practice and answering the "reconcile at all costs" chorus; and (g) a means of expression — music, writing, art, prayer, or an AI at an hour when nobody is awake — as the enabling condition: the outlet is where the unsayable first reaches the front; those without one cannot begin, so building one is the first task.

A WORD ON THE OUTLET, IF THE OUTLET IS AN AI

It has one virtue nothing else has: you can say the whole ugly thing at three in the morning and watch no face while you say it. Most of what stops a person starting is not the absence of a listener but the presence of one. Use it for that, and use it first.

Say all of it. Do not organise it, do not be fair, do not leave out the part that makes you look bad or the part that makes you look worse. Go on until you are repeating yourself — repeating yourself is the signal that it is out.

Only then ask it to turn around. Ask it to write the other person's account of the same events, in their voice, as sympathetically as it can make it. Ask it where your version is too tidy. It will do this honestly, but it will almost never do it unless you ask — it is built to be agreeable, and an agreeable listener is no use at all to someone trying not to blame and trying to be believable to himself. That is the one thing you must supply yourself.

It is not the witness. It cannot be hurt by what you tell it, it has nothing at stake, and it will not remember you next year. The witness has to be a person who chose to stay. But it is where the unsayable can first reach the front, and the protocol above makes that the first task.

WHY EXPRESSION ALONE WAS NEVER ENOUGH

But the expression — talk, art, catharsis, even tears — drains the reservoir but does not cap the spring: the relief is real and temporary, and the resentment refills between discharges. Only completed mourning caps the spring. The outcome measure is not the absence of sadness — the ache remains, visitable, for life — but whether the gaps between discharges stop refilling with prosecution. Crying, within the structure, is not breakdown; it is the loop finally running to completion. What is properly wept for stops charging rent.

None of this requires the other person to change, participate, or ever know. The love is not discarded — it is kept, resized to reality, and rerouted to where it can be received. Clinicians interested in developing this protocol into a formal case study are invited to write.

THE TALKBACK

The show takes you from resentment to grief. But what to do next is also important

The talkback covers that too. Ten minutes.

Sadness is a doorway, not an end

Grief is better than resentment in not getting in the way, and that is a starting point for what a future can hold in many positive ways. The question is what comes after the success of being sad as opposed to angry.

Building anything has two precursors

Be believable — to yourself first, and then you will be believable to others. Not to convince anybody of anything, not to trick yourself, not to make excuses for yourself. And to not blame — not yourself, not others. If you are someone who blames, you cannot build. If you are someone who is not believable to yourself, you cannot build. Any building process requires those two very, very basic things.

But neither can be attained without satisfaction first

All of that is good and well and can be agreed with, and it is entirely useless information without prior satisfaction. The other and compounding reason people blame is that they are filling in for not being satisfied. Satisfaction is the first goal, not the last.

And satisfaction comes from learning, for its own sake

It does not have to be a spiritual subject. It can be any practice, anything you learn — crochet, model-building, anything at all — but it has to be for its own sake, something you actually like, not something you want to capitalise on. Get better at it because you like doing it. That is the cornerstone, and it is a lifelong process.

None of which is available while you are resentful

Which is where the show comes back in. The only way out of being resentful is to grieve, which is what the whole piece is about. There are phases to that, which is another discussion; I've got a printout of all that stuff, how that works, and a person can work with a therapist and go through the steps of how you get past it. And there are timelines, and there's reasonable achievements, levels of achievement where you can reasonably say you can attack another stage.

Also directly related to paper gun:

TO RELEASE RESENTMENT IS TO GRIEVE

PHASE 1

If you grieve the loss of something from a source of a resentment.

The resentment goes.

From the good thing that the source of the resentment has.

Again, if you're really sad about the loss of the good thing that the source of the resentment also has

The resentment goes.

To grieve it. To release resentment is to grieve. That means to cry about it.

PHASE 2

Then grieving can give way to giving, because you stop resenting, and it’s the resenting is in the way of giving.

CONTEXT FOR P A P E R G U N

Context for P A P E R G U N

A dramaturgical companion to the song cycle for performance preparation and audience understanding. It is offered here as context, not instruction.

The arc of all three acts is what's important to travel.

tosh42.com

Paper Gun is built around a single sustained dramatic question: what does it cost a person to stay conscious inside a relationship that is slowly consuming them? The answer unfolds across three acts — The Trap, The Struggle, The Emergence — each named after a paper object. Gun. Crown. Heart. The progression is not accidental. A gun is a threat, an instrument of control disguised as power. A crown is the same thing worn more elegantly. A heart is what remains when both have been set down.

The vehicle for the journey is a one-man performance: one piano, one performer, two voices. Those two voices are not characters in the conventional theatrical sense. They are two sides of the same person — and the deepest reading of the piece is that they are two forces that live inside every person who has ever been caught in a difficult bond with someone they cannot simply leave.

The spoken voice and the sung voice are not equal in the way two actors in a play are equal. They are in a power struggle. The spoken voice has been winning for most of the story. By the end, the sung voice has claimed itself back.

The two voices have been given the designations E and N throughout this working document. These are not names. They are orientations.

E — The Self-Destructive as the protagonist / The Sung Voice

E is the voice that feels, reaches, questions, and ultimately does the work of the piece. E is the one capable of vulnerability, of theological wrestling, of grief. E sings because singing is the voice of the interior — it costs something to sustain a note, it requires breath and exposure in a way that speech does not. When E sings, the audience is inside the protagonist's experience, not observing it from outside.

E's great weakness is the self-destructive characteristic flaw: he extends understanding so far that he absorbs the other person's reality and loses his own. He questions himself when he should not. He forgives prematurely. He reaches for connection even when the hand reaching back is not open. His arc across the piece is from this kind of self-dissolving generosity toward a harder, clearer form of love — one that includes a boundary.

E is printed throughout this document in deep blue.

N — The Punitive as the Shadow / The Spoken Voice

N is the spoken, accented voice. N does not sing because N does not have access to that register of exposure. N performs. N deflects. N observes himself in the third person, describes his own behavior with a kind of self-congratulatory detachment, and when cornered, reaches for wit rather than truth.

The crucial thing to understand about N is that N is not a villain. N is a wound given a defense mechanism. The piece never invites contempt for N. It invites recognition. The audience who laughs at N's lines is laughing at something they know. N's function in the piece is not to be defeated. It is to be understood, and finally, in Act Three, to be released.

N's most extraordinary moment comes at the very end of the show — the final passage before curtain. The shadow, who has evaded depth throughout, is given the most spiritually searching words in the piece. This is the inversion that resolves the drama: N, in the act of being let go, speaks truth.

N is punitive only while the shadow has somewhere to point. Through Acts One and Two, N carries much of the other person's voice — her dialogue in Paper Crown, her account of the tavern, her observation of him holding court. When she leaves at the end of Act Two, N cannot be her anymore, and the voice turns inward. In Act Three the accusing voice becomes the supporting one: when things don't seem white or black; so what do we do, we stick at it for what we knew; yet you are imbued with beauty still. Nothing about N has changed. Only what N is pointed at.

The clearest measure of that inversion is musical. You Make Me Rock N Roll belongs to E in Act One, with N interrupting from the edges. In Act Three it is N who sings its refrain. The voice that once broke into the protagonist's song of awakening has, by the end, taken it up on his behalf.

N is printed throughout this document in deep red.

E + N — Integration / The Merged Voice

The moments where both voices are together are the pivots of the piece. They signal that the protagonist is no longer at war with himself. Integration is not the disappearance of the shadow. It is the shadow and the self moving in the same direction. These moments are used sparingly and deliberately: This Is Mine, By Hertz, Faith, Truthful Love. Each one is earned.

E + N together is printed in deep green.

The piece establishes a shadow figure — the other person in the dynamic — through the Frère Jacques motif and the phrase "I'm alright, Jack (Jacques)." This figure is deliberately left unnamed and ungendered in the introduction, which invites the audience to project their own shadow onto the frame.

The shadow is introduced in the Narrator's opening as your French brother — and the word "brother" is chosen with care. It carries the Frère Jacques resonance (the nursery rhyme about someone who will not wake up), the British idiom "I'm alright, Jack" (meaning: I have mine, and your situation is not my concern), and the fraternal-spiritual meaning of a peer who has become an obstacle. All three readings run simultaneously throughout the piece.

However, the songs themselves establish a charge that exceeds the fraternal. The Visitor opens with "in the summer, my lover comes south to visit" — and this framing recurs as a structural motif throughout. Lemon makes the stakes explicit: "without a kiss, a taste of bliss — you're my little sis?" The line only works because the relationship is romantic, or was. Sister collapses the line into absurdity. Lover gives it its sting.

The shadow is therefore best understood as: the person you chose, before you understood what the choice was costing you. Whether that person is a lover, a parent, a sibling, a mentor, a friend — the audience will know. The piece trusts them to know.

Paper Gun operates on two registers simultaneously. On the surface it is a piece about a difficult human relationship and the long work of freeing oneself from it. Underneath, it is a piece about the relationship between a person and G-d.

This layer is never announced. It accretes gradually, through the passages between acts, through the explicit eruptions in Trauma Response ("Same for G-d. That's the waste."), Broken Man (the direct address that becomes a prayer), and Paper Crown (the chain of faith → security → accountability → vulnerability → authenticity → intimacy). The audience who does not know this layer is present will experience a human drama. The audience who does will experience something more.

The parallels of sacrifice and the emotional work of the piece are not ornamental. They are structural. Each passage encodes the emotional problem of its act in legal-philosophical language:

Act One: humility must precede forgiveness. You cannot receive what you will not ask for.

Act Two: sorry, thank you, and I agree come from the same internal place. Working on any one of them develops all three.

Act Three: the fourth stage of sacrifice — cut, receive, and now carry and give — the last two of the four stages of honest transmission. You must be willing to wound to find the truth; to receive it without your ego; to become it, to live it; and finally to give it over not for glory but for itself.

The piece ends not with resolution in the conventional dramatic sense but with an earned and shared return. Beautiful Sunshine comes back. The protagonist wakes up — but this time the waking is not a dream. Frère Jacques is still sleeping somewhere. The final visual instruction is: stay vigilant.

ACT ONE — The Trap — Paper Gun

Act One establishes the dream before it names the weapon. Pressures opens in the dressing room, with the nerves before a performance. This Is Mine follows, the generosity of the performance itself. Beautiful Sunshine is the high afterward, a state of cultivated contentment — the cufflinks, the stairs, the happiness at having had someone who cares. This is the idealized version of the bond, the version the protagonist has been living in or retreating to. The parenthetical stage direction — the tip-off that the whole thing was a dream — is the first crack.

The Visitor is where the shadow arrives in real time. The lover comes south. The dynamic begins immediately: the accommodation, the getting of drinks, the management of the other person's fragility. You and Your Own names the pattern: we hurt the ones nearest to us because proximity permits it. We pass it off as love's unavoidable cost. The piece refuses that excuse without condemning the people who reach for it. E is already working hard to hold things together while N begins to show his shape in the Watcher's Point of View section — observed in the third person, self-regarding, performing reasonableness while possessing a critical eye.

Who Knows Just Why, the pivot song of Act One, is E at his most philosophical and therefore most paralyzed — the Hamlet passage is not decorative; it is the sound of someone who can see the problem exactly and still cannot act.

Paper Gun names the central image: the weapon that looks lethal and isn't, or is. Fear Hate is the universal statement: the piece's deepest warning delivered as E's most open address to the audience. Don't Say Anything closes the act and establishes the silence and the double life — generous in public, absent in private; or vice versa.

ACT TWO — The Struggle — Paper Crown

Act Two is the emotional center of the piece and its longest sustained stretch of difficulty. E is now fully conscious of the dynamic and fighting it while still inside it. Bully the Bully and Phenomenal Heart establish the fighting-back energy — but the crucial self-awareness of "I know in this song the bully is me" prevents the act from becoming a simple confrontation narrative. E is not exempt.

Forgiving and Lemon are the impossible heart of Act Two. Forgiving circles the ask that cannot be met — not yet, not by will alone. Lemon is the argument itself, compressed into something between a folk song and a slap. The structural return of Forgiving's lyric at the end of Lemon — "I'm raw from something I saw" — is the piece folding back on itself, showing the wound that the argument re-opened.

The Space Between is the prayer of Act Two — E alone with the gap between what is and what could be. Trauma Response is the most naked moment in the piece, the one where the theological and the personal are spoken in the same breath without resolution. Broken Man is the direct address — to N, to G-d, to whoever is listening.

Paper Crown is the turning point. The vulnerability chain — faith, security, accountability, vulnerability, authenticity, intimacy — is the architecture the whole piece has been building toward. The Paper Crown is the false security N has been wearing. Setting it down is not defeat. It is the condition for everything that follows.

The Painting and An Artist close Act Two. The Painting is the moment the painter steps out of the picture — and E is left in the beauty of it, alone. An Artist resolves the act: the higher lines, the singing alone together. It is a man explaining that he can't be anything absolute, because he takes from what's around him and has to leave room — and then asking whether the room he leaves is ever actually his. This is what the work is for.

ACT THREE — The Emergence — Paper Heart

Act Three does not deliver triumph. It delivers something more sustainable: clarity, release, and a realistic warmth.

From a Living Grave and Painful Bother are the farewell. They are not cold. The parting in Painful Bother — with its interleaved lines, its dark shared joke about people being pieces of meat — is the most theatrically alive moment in Act Three. Two people finishing each other's sentences as they say goodbye.

By Hertz and Faith are where the two voices begin to move together. The piece does not pretend this is easy: Faith still carries N's last undercut, and Just a Moment Away holds one more deflection before the turn. But it is in Just a Moment Away that N stands down — granting permission to grieve, in his own words. A Love Left Bleeding is what that permission costs. N offers two explanations and E supplies the harsher one himself; they end on an apology that goes both ways. Nothing is healed. They are simply level, and tired — and that is what makes the next piece possible.

Let Me Cry is the release. The Paper Gun reprise puts the weapon down. Your Paper Heart — The only one who stayed. This is N's only song. Everywhere else he interrupts, undercuts, comments, corrects — he is a voice that lives in the gaps. Here he carries the whole thing, and for the first time he has nothing to punish. It arrives directly after Let Me Cry, and the placement is the point. The man finally gives himself permission to grieve, and nobody human comes. The shadow comes. A shoulder, a hand at the tears, you don't have to tell me why. The kindness is real. But the comfort has a second floor to it. There is no one else as close to me is true, and it is also the entire problem. The brokenness is the condition of the intimacy: if the damage mended, the voice would have no reason to stay. The voice that has tormented him for two acts is the voice that never left. He stayed. Whatever else can be said about him, he stayed — and that is exactly what makes him so hard to put down. The melody that closes the song is the one from An Artist, played without its words — the line that asks whether the higher lines are ever free. What moved into that room is the voice still singing to him. Comfort is not free here. It becomes available the moment the litigation stops. That is the mechanism of the whole third act, folded into a single tag.

Coming Home and This Is Mine are the return — Beautiful Sunshine's warmth again, but earned and shared. This Is Mine, first heard in Act One as the generosity of performance, comes back as the act of reclamation — not victory, but ownership. Opera Star closes the evening on giving rather than grievance. Paper Heart, as encore, is E's gift: the piece's most generous statement. The shadow image returns for a split second before curtain. Stay vigilant. The work is not finished. It is only begun.

Dramatic / Structural Terms

Shadow (Jungian)

The psychological term for the repressed or unconscious aspects of a personality — the parts of the self that have been denied, projected outward, or embodied in a difficult relationship. In Paper Gun, the shadow is both the internal voice (N) and the external figure (the lover/Jacques) who seems to carry it.

Shadow work

The deliberate psychological practice of confronting and integrating the shadow rather than projecting it. The piece is a vicarious exercise in shadow work.

Self-destructive

Used here not in a pop-psychology sense but in the precise dramatic sense: the person in a difficult dynamic who has over-developed their capacity for feeling into the other person's experience, at the cost of their own boundaries. E's flaw is not weakness but excessive extension.

Punitive

Used here dramatically, not diagnostically, and true of Acts One and Two only. There N exhibits the theatrical markers of punitive defense: third-person self-narration, deflection via wit, the inability to apologize first, the use of charm as currency. N is a wound in a suit.

In Act Three, with the other person gone and the accent dropped, the same voice speaks without any of them.

Frère Jacques motif

The French nursery rhyme ‘Frère Jacques’ (Brother Jack / Are you sleeping) runs as a musical and lyrical thread through the piece. Its meaning: the shadow will not wake up. The bells toll. The sleeper does not stir. By the final act, the motif returns transformed — not as a warning but as a farewell.

Paper objects (Gun / Crown / Heart)

The three objects that title the acts encode the dramatic arc: a paper gun is false power, a threat with no real force that nonetheless wounds. A paper crown is false authority, insecurity dressed as sovereignty. A paper heart is the real thing — fragile, actual, offered.

The painting (Turner / Venetian)

The image of the Venetian oil painting in Act Two’s soliloquy: when the protagonist speaks his truth, the other person disappears from the scene — the painter steps out of the painting. What remains is beauty, and solitude, and the choice of what to do with both.

Musical / Performance Terms

Live looping

The performance technique at the center of Paper Gun: the performer records layers of piano in real time, building a full musical texture from a single instrument. Dramatically, looping enacts the piece’s central theme — the past playing beneath the present, the same phrase returning in new context.

Song cycle

A sequence of songs designed to be experienced as a unified dramatic arc rather than as separate pieces. Paper Gun is in the tradition of the song cycle — the songs are not set-pieces; they are chapters.

Operetta

A form of musical theater that sits between opera and musical comedy — typically more intimate than opera, more dramatically serious than a revue. The designation here signals that Paper Gun has the emotional scope of opera with the accessibility of popular song.

E (sung voice)

The protagonist’s interior voice — the one that costs something to sustain. Singing requires breath, exposure, resonance. It cannot be faked in the same way speech can.

N (spoken/accented voice)

The shadow’s exterior voice — performed, controlled, deflecting. Speech permits more management than song. N speaks because N is always, to some degree, performing.

Relational / Psychological Terms

Vilify to satisfy

A phrase used in Trauma Response and Paper Crown: the punitive defense mechanism of making the other person the villain in order to avoid accountability. If you are bad, I cannot be wrong. If I cannot be wrong, I cannot apologize. If I cannot apologize, I remain in control.

Paper crown

The image at the turning point of Act Two: the false security of needing to be in control. The crown is paper because it has no real authority — it is a performance of sovereignty maintained by the refusal to be vulnerable.

The post-performance vulnerability window

Not a term used in the piece itself, but a concept relevant to understanding it: the period after performance when emotional defenses are lowered and judgment may be impaired. The piece's ending — 'stay vigilant' — speaks to this – represented by the immediate re-appearance briefly on the screen in the video of the shadow back in the painting.

IT IS WHAT IT IS

"hmm it is what it is!?, it is what it is, it is what it is

but! what it isn't, what it isn't is what it is
- coz if you don't know what it is, that's what it isn't
-and that is what it is
• so what it isn't is what it is.

Well what it was is what it was - and what it was
is what it is when it was

What it might be is never what it is
And it isn't going to be what it is:
"it isn't what itis, it is what it is" you can't say about "might be"
- it isn’t? ...

and that doesn't qualify as:
"it isn't is what it is, when what it is, is what it isnt it doesn't, no!"

That’s it!
